The primary objective of the drive was to promote awareness regarding menstrual hygiene, provide essential sanitary products, and support the educational needs of underprivileged children through the distribution of stationery items.

The event commenced with the volunteers assembling at the venue, after which they were divided into small groups to ensure effective interaction and engagement. Each group actively participated in communicating with the children and women present at the venue. The volunteers conducted informative sessions focusing on women's hygiene, menstrual health, and the importance of breaking societal taboos surrounding periods.

In addition to this, awareness was also spread about the POCSO (Protection of Children from Sexual Offences) Act to educate both children and women about their rights and safety. The sessions were interactive, encouraging participants to ask questions and openly discuss their concerns.

Following the awareness activities, sanitary pads were distributed among the women to promote safe and hygienic menstrual practices. Stationery items such as notebooks, pens, and other educational materials were also distributed among the children to support their academic growth.

The drive was a meaningful initiative that not only addressed essential health and educational needs but also fostered a sense of social responsibility among the volunteers. The collaboration between the NSS Unit and the Emyrean Club played a crucial role in the successful execution of the event.

Overall, the program was impactful, spreading awareness, providing necessary resources, and contributing positively to the community.
